PREFACE.

COMPLETE success in any department can be secured only by earnest and intelligent co-operation of individuals.

A machine may, humanly speaking, be perfect, and yet, for want of a skillful operator, it may fail to perform well.

Perfection is not claimed for this little book, yet, by its aid, results can be secured by the average teacher that will, I believe, justify both its existence and its name.

We begin with the object itself. For the first lessons, such objects have been selected as can, without difficulty, be brought before the class, and such as can be represented on the blackboard by teachers unskilled in drawing; and which can also be readily drawn by the child.

From the object, we develop language; from its representation (picture), the representation of language (written words or word pictures); from both, the power of grasping ideas from things and graphic (or typo-graphic) representations, and of expressing them with ease and naturalness. The eye and the ear are skilled to know — the tongue and the hand to do.

The system here pursued is a step in advance of the Word-Method (as generally understood), inasmuch as it begins, not with separate words, but with combinations of words — with thought expressions.

Words, as words, obscure thought; but, words as thought media, are transparent. Reading is grasping thought from language, and imparting thought (so grasped,) through language. Recognizing and pronouncing words, as words, is not reading.

The illustrations in this book are a marked feature, and one which the children, at least, will readily appreciate, and, with me, thank the publishers for that co-operation which has secured them in such perfection.

Grateful to a generous public for the favor it has shown to my former works, I now offer this book, believing it will be recognized as a still more successful effort to make the child's first days at school pleasant and profitable, and as a step in advance toward securing the education that is to be in the "Good time coming," when, following nature more closely, it will be "Sport to learn."

HINTS TO TEACHERS.

THERE are three distinct systems of teaching Reading, viz: the Alphabetic, in which the letters, as parts of Written Words, are taught first; the Phonetic, in which the sounds, as parts of Spoken Words, are taught first; and the Word Method, in which the whole word, as the element of language, is taught first. These methods are, in practice, often more or less combined.

In this book I present another method, and one which experience has proved to be a still nearer approach to the real Method of Nature than either of the three systems mentioned above. By this method we begin, not with single words, but with combinations of words. From these combinations the separate words are learned as the letters are by the Word-Method. In the Word-Method, the attention is first called to the meaning of the word, and then to the printed word as the representation of that meaning. In this method, the attention is called to the thought first, and then to the combination of words as the representation of the thought. From this peculiarity, I call it THE SENTENCE METHOD.

That this method is entirely practical, and possesses decided advantages over the systems first named, I have no doubt; but from my experience in the introduction of the Word-Method (which I first published in 1846), I am advised that, however good a system may be, its general introduction will be sooner gained by not presenting it at first in its most radical form.

The real object of reading is to gain information. In oral reading, we wish, in addition, to impart information and also to give pleasure. In learning to talk, children first grasp ideas from objects and then labor to express them. The separate meaning of the words used is not so much noticed as their combined meaning, because it takes the combination to give birth to the idea. This truth applies also to written language. The aim of the teacher should, therefore, be, not so much to teach separate words as to teach expressions of thought. The Word-Method enables teachers to do this more nearly than the Alphabetic or Phonic, because it requires less steps to get-up-to the IDEA, and each step diverts from the real object. If, therefore, the best results are to be sought after, the teacher must endeavor to train the eye to take in at a glance enough words to put the mind in possession of the idea (for the idea is the unit, and as a unit it must be known and appreciated before its expression can be properly given; and the mind must be trained to fix itself on the idea as though derived from the original source and not from words, i. e., to look through the words recognized by the eye, to the thought only, and to use the words as simply servants to unload the mind of its ideas. Not fill the eye and the mind are thus trained, can good reading be secured. Fixing the attention on the words is like looking at glass, which, when looked at, becomes opaque and hides the view beyond. If, by the Word-Method (as often taught), such blinding of the mental vision is possible, what shall we say for those systems which begin with the letters?

"But," you will say, "the words must be taught." I reply: They will necessarily become known with very little special teaching, by the system here pursued, and, therefore, the direct teaching of them should be of secondary importance. The child eats to satisfy hunger or to gratify taste, not to nourish and strengthen its body; yet, notwithstanding, the body is nourished and strengthened none the less by the eating. Indeed, eating simply for the nourishment, defeats very largely, at least, the object in view. So God in wisdom ordains.

The mind has taste—the mind hungers. Satisfy this taste, this hunger, by giving food that is palatable, that is nourishing, that is adapted to its development, that is properly prepared,—and see to it that the food is properly administered, too,—then, neither the taste nor the appetite will become cloyed, but both will be sharpened and made more sensitive and appreciative; meanwhile, growth and strength necessarily—naturally—follow.

HOW SHALL WE TEACH?

At first, teach by means of Objects and Pictures, and Oral Lessons.

1st. By Objects.—Let the objects be present, let them be seen, handled, talked about. Take, for example, a box—as a chalk box. The children see it, have seen it many a time, and know what it is; and most of them have boxes at home. Take the box in your hand, and, calling the children's attention to it, say to them, "I have a box," a fact they already know, because they see it in your hand. Let the children in turn take the box and repeat the statement. Using other objects, make similar statements with reference to them, and here let the first lesson end.

At the second lesson, hold up the box as at the first lesson, and ask, "What have I in my hand?" They will naturally answer, A box. This is the reply wanted, and which you should get. Now, let each child take the box and ask the same question, the class answering as before. Other objects should also be used, and may be such as belong in the school-room, or such as the children have brought in for this purpose.

2d. By Pictures.—After again calling attention to the box, make a picture of it on the blackboard (see page 9), and show the class how to make it. Let the children practice drawing it on the blackboard and on their slates. From the representing of things by pictures, the idea of representing words (spoken words) by marks (written words) is obtained.

At the next lesson, with the box in hand, repeat the question and get the answer as before, "A box." Pointing to the picture, ask, "What is this?" and get the same answer, "A box," (not "A picture of a box.")*) Write or print this answer near the picture, as shown on page 9. Repeat the question, pointing to the picture, and tell the class that the answer they gave is what you have written on the board. Again repeating the question, let the children reply with their eyes fixed on this written answer. Repeat the question many times by simply pointing to the box and to the picture, the children still looking at the written words as they answer, "A box." Now place the phrase (a box) on other parts of the board and test their ability to recognize it. If able to, let them look for it in the book, first on page 9, and then on page 11.

Develop other answers from other objects (see pages 9 and 10), in the same manner. Place them as you proceed, on the board, promiscuously, and test the ability to recognize and name them. Get the answers from the object, the picture, and the words, and see that the manner of the reply is alike from all, i. e., perfectly natural.

In the book, the pictures are placed on one side of the page with the question over them, and the answers on the other side. By this arrangement, either can be covered when desired; or one picture and its answer may be singled out. Let the child read the pictures, i. e., as you point to the box, let him say, "A box." As you point to the hat, let him say, "A hat," etc. Repeat, the child looking now at the words. Repeat again, pointing alternately to the pictures and the phrases, the child replying as you do so. Repeat, pointing only to the phrases. Now cover the pictures, and repeat, pointing at the phrases. If the child hesitates, uncover the picture. When able to read them on the picture pages, turn to Review Lessons where there are no pictures to aid.

Continue lessons of this nature till complete familiarity with them is secured, and ability to recognize the written answer, is acquired.

By this time it will be found that the children have not only noticed the forms of the individual words, but that they have attached to these forms, names,—that they, in fact, know the words, and are able to point them out and name them wherever seen.

Some teachers may desire to make direct efforts to teach the separate words. In anticipation of such desire, I digress, somewhat, to show how to do it, and begin on page 15 with

*The PICTURE may be called a box with as much propriety as the character (written word) used to represent a word (spoken word) may be called a word.

Names of Things.—Everything has a name. This you can lead the children to discover. Begin by asking a child if he has a name, and what it is. Proceed to names of other children, to names of animals, and of things. Finally, ask for something that has no name. It will be perceived that the name is comprised in one word, as boy, ox, etc. Do not confound the answer developed in the first six lessons with the name—the answer now required. Proceed, orally, at first, as already shown. Let things seen in the school-room be named first; then things seen out doors, things seen at home, in the house, barn, shop, store; in the field, garden, woods; then let animals, plants, trees, fruits, etc., etc., be named. A little skill will direct the children in gathering names to be given at an appointed time, which will not only interest and benefit them, but teachers and parents as well.

The printed word should be given (on the blackboard) as the name of the thing mentioned, and taught as already explained for teaching the phrase, "A box."

Kinds of Things.—On page 9 we have "a box"; on page 20 we have "a red box." The adjective word is introduced to tell the kind. To teach this phrase, have a red box, and then proceed precisely as explained for teaching "a box." When you make the picture, color it to agree with the adjective. (See pages 20 and 21.) If possible, have several boxes of various colors, sizes, and materials, and let the expression for each be taught; as, for example, a red box, a green box, a blue box, a white box, a black box, a large box, a small box, a wooden box, a tin box, etc. After which, teach expressions for different things having a common property; as, for instance, a red box, a red cap, a red ox, etc. Continue this multiplying of phrases till familiarity with them is secured and the eye is sufficiently trained to grasp the whole expression and recognize it at a glance. Test this ability by placing the phrases on the board, and as you point to the object or picture, let the children point out the corresponding phrase.

The danger, at this point, is in making too great haste. Let me caution you to make it slowly. Let THOROUGHNESS be your motto. Do not neglect the Oral Lessons. This class of expressions gives wide scope for observation and practice.

Acts of Things.—On page 23, complete sentences are formed. In teaching them, let the action or fact occur before the class, and let a statement of it be made, orally, from information thus obtained. Afterwards place the sentence on the board for the class to look at as it is repeated. For instance, to teach the sentence, "the girl reads," let the children see a girl reading, and then ask them what the girl does; they will answer, "the girl reads." Write the statement and proceed as heretofore directed. Many repetitions will be necessary, and several sentences may be given before either is distinctly recognized. Keep the attention on the idea rather than on the graphic expression of it.

Multiply the sentences and give variety in form; for example,—I hear a clock, I see a knife, I smell a rose, I taste an apple, I feel a book, etc. Teach each sense to take cognizance of facts, i. e., to gather information,—and the children to express properly, in words, the facts so gathered.

Review Lesson.—These should be used as “hunting grounds” for the lessons as learned, and expeditions for phrases, sentences, and words, should often be made to them. It will be hardly possible to proceed thus through Part I without the words becoming known. Before commencing Part II, review carefully from the beginning of the book, calling the attention more directly to the words.

Part II contains twenty-six lessons, named Lesson A, Lesson B, etc., in alphabetic order. Refer to these lessons by their names as you would refer to things. It will not be long before the children will know these names, and recognize the letters also. By the side of the pictures, the “lower case” letters, in Roman and Script, are found. They are placed there, not to be taught, but to be learned by the children, almost, if not quite, unconsciously. The name of the lesson carries the name of the letter, and the pastime of drawing them will fix their forms in the mind. To test as well as to aid their observation, let them occasionally look for the letter in the words. It will not materially interrupt our method of learning the words and sentences, as the attention is not to be fixed on them as tasks.

In this Part, all the words are placed at the bottom of the pages for separate recognition. Before commencing Part III, review again from the beginning of the book, teaching the children to spell the words.

Part III.—The first lessons of this part are designed to introduce a variety of new, yet familiar, words. The simplicity of the reading matter compensates for the number given. All the new words are placed at the beginning of the lessons for pronunciation and spelling. The children should be taught to make these words on their slates. Spelling should be done mainly by writing, as this is the only use we make of it in practical life.

The Grading has been carefully guarded throughout the entire book. By short and easy steps the child passes from one lesson to another. Sometimes, indeed, they are so short and easy that no apparent effort is required; while at other times, they are, at most, but pleasant tasks to be performed. Gently undulating roads are less wearisome than those constantly, though gradually, ascending—than those, even, on a level plane.

☞ For sounds of the letters and their use, see MODEL SECOND READER.

The object of this book in English and Dakota is especially to aid the Dakotas in learning to read and understand the English Language. To them our language is very difficult of acquisition. Many have undertaken to learn it and failed, or succeeded only to a limited extent. While, in our efforts to civilize and evangelize the Dakota people, we have rightly placed education in their own tongue first, as most needed and most fruitful in results, we are also fully aware of the great advantages to them of a knowledge of English. And this book is prepared to help them overcome the difficulties in their way.

It will be noted by English readers, that our substantive verb is variously rendered. With propositions it is un, plural unpi; as en un, akan un, etc. Sometimes it is found in ee, dee, hee, and heca. But more commonly it is not expressed at all in Dakota; as De taspantanka tanka, this apple large. The articles also in English do not always correspond with wan and kin of the Dakota. Sometimes, in this book, they are used to represent a or an and the, when they would be omitted in Dakota composition.

TO THE READER :

This book has been prepared especially, to meet a very pressing want in helping Dakotas to learn the English language. And if, at the same time, it helps any English worker in the Dakota field, to make such progress in the language of the natives as to increase his usefulness, the author of the book will have a double benefit.
